

Federal public service unions united to defend their right to collective bargaining

OTTAWA, April 22, 2015 /CNW/ - Federal public service unions are united in their opposition to the Conservative government's plan to unilaterally eliminate the existing sick leave provisions in their collective agreements. In a meeting today, the federal public service unions, which together represent more than 166,000 employees, agreed to develop a common response to the federal government's proposal.

"What the government is proposing in the 2015 budget will derail negotiations and cause irreparable damage to labour relations in the public service," said Ron Cochrane, chair of the National Joint Council of the federal public service unions. "For the government to say that it will legislate the bargaining outcome if we do not agree at the bargaining table is unfair and it's a violation of our right to free collective bargaining."

The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that the right of workers to collective bargaining is a constitutional right protected by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, explained Mr. Cochrane.
